

Acknowledgments

A multiyear project of this sort is always such that debts are acquired. The editors are happy to acknowledge, with deep gratitude, the United Nations Development Programme, which gave the ICTJ the initial grant to develop this research, and which eventually published the vetting guidelines that came as a result of the work; the United Nations Department of Peacekeeping Operations, for entering into a partnership on vetting with the ICTJ and seeking its assistance in developing post-conflict institutional reform strategies; the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, for supporting our work leading to the issue on vetting in its series, Rule-of-Law Tools for Post-Conflict States; and the governments of the United Kingdom and the Netherlands, for grants that supported this research. Special thanks goes to the Swiss Ministry of Foreign Affairs, which gave us funding to support the present publication. Finally, it is our pleasure to include in the list of institutions to which we are indebted the Rockefeller Foundation, which kindly allowed us to use its conference center in Bellagio, Italy, for a remarkable meeting of authors.

In addition to institutions, many individuals deserve recognition and thanks: Gábor Halmai, Professor of Law and Executive Director of the Hungarian Human Rights Information and Documentation Center INDOK, with whom we worked closely on the production of the Eastern and Central European case studies; and Ian Martin, Paul van Zyl, Graeme Simpson, Serge Rumin, Andrea Armstrong, Elsa España, Lizzie Goodfriend, and Briony MacPhee, current and former staff members at the ICTJ. Roger Duthie deserves special mention for tireless work on this project, well beyond that involved in writing the introduction. We are of course grateful to the authors of the papers in this volume, and to Etannibi Alemika, Annika Hansen, Cynthia Horne, Javier Mariezcurrena, and the other participants at the Bellagio meeting.

Alexander Mayer-Rieckh, Geneva, Switzerland

Pablo de Greiff, New York, USA